African American’s in Times of War

Did you know the real LONE RANGER was an African American man named Bass Reeves. He did live among the Indians, as the character portrayed in the series “Lone Ranger.” However, during this era African Americans could not be casted to play this character, so it was changed to be a white man wearing a black mask instead.

Contrary to what classic westerns might have us believe, one in four American cowboys was actually African-American. US Deputy Marshal Bass Reeves, an African-American, fled the Civil War, befriended the Seminole and Creek Indians, and eventually became one of the greatest lawmen of the Wild West. He wrangled thousands of criminals, and left a silver dollar as his calling card. Yet despite being one of the most impressive Wild West figures, Bass Reeves was all but forgotten.
