MOMENT'S REFLECTION

“Friends, select from among yourselves seven men of good standing, full of the Spirit and of wisdom, whom we may appoint to this task.” -Acts 6:3

At our church's annual Cabinet Planning meeting, Saturday, January 9, 2016, I talked with the group about the importance of core values. Core values, I said, are the single best predictors of the ministries we'll choose to do in the coming year. These core values are also the best predictors of those ministries that we'll be inclined to support with both time and money. In short, plan ministries that give expression to our church's core values and we'll most likely unleash a new-found sense of passion. The 1st century church, for instance, believed that caring for and watching after the widows was extremely important. When the need was presented, the church mobilized itself to meet that need.

I know what some of you might be thinking. Aren't there some things that the Church should do? Mission? Outreach? Bible study? Yes. It's the Church's call to grow in ministry—ever learning to take on the mind of Christ and Christ's priorities. Yet most people in most local congregations already work consciously, more often subconsciously, from certain core values. A minister's effectiveness isn't so much changing a people as learning to lead a people in directions they're already inclined to go. Transformational leadership is essential. The Bible's prophets were agents of change. The people of God had strayed from right priorities. But more often, effective leaders find authentic ways to affirm existing shared core values.

Moment's Reflection (continued)

So, what are our core values? I gave the group a list of possible core values and I asked them to pick five. Then we went around the room and shared our personal core value selections. I was most interested to see if common core values emerged. And, of course, they did. From the Cabinet leadership body of about 20, the following top 5 core values emerged:

Top 5 Shared Core Values

Family (8 votes)

Caring (7)

Children (5)

Compassion (5)

Love (5)

Notable Second-Tier Shared Core Values

Community (4)

History/Past (4)

Laughter (3)

Acceptance (3)

Bottom line? Inasmuch as the Cabinet represents the larger congregation's core values, it seems to me that First Christian Church, Garland, is a congregation that has a strong impulse to plan and implement ministries for Family, and especially children, that will nurture Christian ideals of compassion, love and caring. The Cabinet's second-tier list may suggest that we're also an historically rooted and proud community of faith that also wishes to create a fun and accepting environment for our children and families.

I'd be curious to hear how you interpret these findings. Do they resonate with your sense of core values? With your perception of our congregation's core values? If so, are their ministries we can do to give even deeper expression to these core values? -Dan
