MOMENT'S REFLECTION

"Then he said to Thomas, 'Put your fingers here and see my hands. Reach out your hand and put it in my side.'"
-John 20:27

I've been watching the process of destruction going on across the street from our church. The old Bank of America building has been coming down in large chunks and pieces the last couple of months. I remember going to that bank 16 years ago to open a new checking account. Now that building, much less all the people and memories that ever were in that building, are the stuff of rubble.

As demolition crews completed their work, I wondered if they'd leave anything old remaining. Just when it looked like they'd tear it all down, wrecking crews stopped. I hear they plan to build some new apartments—condominiums as we like to call them. But whatever new structure goes up in the months ahead will apparently include the remnants of the old building. In my preacherly way, I suppose I took that to be some sort of parable of deeper meaning. Let me explain.

Years ago, I visited the site of the OKC Murrah Building bombing. I still remember the aftermath of the day, April 19, 1995, when Timothy McVeigh completed his dastardly deed, and there wasn't much left but twisted steel and crumbled mortar. City, state, and federal workers wasted no time tearing down its remains and vowed to rebuild. But when I visited the memorial site I noticed that planners had been careful to preserve some of what used to be there—a wall from the old building, a tree that withstood the blast and still thrives. And I couldn't figure why. Why would anyone ever want to go to that site and see and remember anything from that horrible dark day?

Dr. David Jensen, in his book, Living Hope, offers an answer I either failed to learn or have forgotten. Following his resurrection, Jesus comes back to his disciples. We life-time Christians think this is story to teach about Doubting Thomas and every one of us like him. And it is. But Jensen says we should pay more attention to what Jesus does. To help Thomas, Jesus pulls aside his outer robe and shows Thomas the scars from his crucifixion. Dr. Jensen comments on the theological importance of that gospel detail: "The risen Christ reveals his wounds. Resurrection doesn't erase the scars of crucifixion but preserves them."

God's new resurrection doesn't dispense with everything old. It incorporates some of the old stuff. And in incorporating this old stuff, it validates the experience this old stuff represents—including the struggles, the pain, the injustice—and redeems its. Christ's resurrection utterly redeems it, not by taking it away but by making it right. Jensen goes on to say: "In the resurrection, though pain and mourning reign no more, nothing is forgotten, or obliterated but gathered together into God's very life."

Sometimes as pastor, I hear people talk about periods in their lives that have been so hard, so difficult, that they'd just as soon forget them—experiences that have seemed like a waste of time. Jensen wants to persuade us (and rightly so) that a Christian theology of resurrection teaches us look differently at the totality of our lives. Our scars, our pains, as much as the new life to which we turn, are a part of God's redemptive plan, too. This "old stuff" of our lives is the grist by which God chooses to make a way to resurrection. -Dan, Lent 2017

From Sharon Campbell, Board Chair

As we are now in the second month of the new year, I wanted to give a short report on FCCG's new board structure for 2017. In July, 2016, a task force was formed to look into creating a smaller church board on a trial basis. The task force spent an ample amount of time in study and discussion, in addition to conducting a congregational-wide survey. After much discernment and prayer, the task force recommended "that for a period of one year, beginning January, 2017, the current board delegate its powers to a smaller board, this number to be decided by the current board." The board discussed the recommendation, shared suggestions and concerns, and voted to approve the recommendation on September 12, 2016. The board positions were then filled from congregational nominations, and the congregation voted to approve the new board structure and representatives on November 20, 2016. The current bylaws remain in effect.

These board representatives will serve for a one-year trial period. During this time a Board Task Force will meet to continue study, discussion and evaluation of the board structure. This new task force is made up of the Board Chair (Sharon Campbell), Vice Chair (Kathleen Yant), ministers (Dan Jones and Casey Tanguay), and two at-large members (Doug Harrison and Melody Biffle). At the end of the year, this task force will provide a report/recommendation, at which time, a full board and congregational vote will be taken to decide whether to continue with the smaller board of representatives or revert back to the larger boards of the past.

So far, the feedback on the smaller group of board representatives has been positive overall. I welcome your questions and comments about the new [trial] board structure, and ask that you pray for the board representatives as they do God's work through the church's goals and initiatives.
